Pointing out that it will require 2.78 officers and 5.110 men to provide one relief for all the coast defenses constructed and proposed in the United States at the entrances of the Isthmian canal, and in the insular possessions, General Murray remarks that under the present system it would be impracticable to furnish this number. Therefore, he says, attention must be directed to some plan that will supply at the outbreak of war the deficiency from the organized millitia.
